About the Program's Five-Month Design

The Nursing Leadership Symposium is for nurses new or moving into an executive level position to understand the scope of the role and the fundamental foundational elements of the job. Participants will enhance leadership, critical thinking and management skills, learn to streamline and improve processes and systems, define new clinical approaches to services, and build a network with other professionals.

The Nursing Leadership Symposium develops new and emerging nursing leaders in aging services. This exceptional five-part program helps professionals make a successful transition from clinical care to the role of a professional executive nurse leader or director of nursing through further development of critical thinking, strategic planning, communications and innovative team development skills.

Participants develop the visionary leadership qualities that leverage knowledge and innovation to create a framework which supports progressive care models and delivers quality of life for those served.

The program combines lecture, experiential learning, small and large group discussions, independent work assignments, research and valuable learning and insights from guest experts in the profession and older adult services.
